In lieu of an abstract, here is a brief excerpt of the content:

Reviewed by:

April Spisak

Toddlers are not always easy to love, but parents do it anyway, as Jenkins makes clear in this direct, affectionate address to an unruly offspring. Regardless of how the little one misbehaves, the narrator is right there: "Love you when you unfold all the laundry I just folded. . . . Love you, yes, when you are way too loud. . . . Love you when you will not share. . . . Love you, even when you say you don't love me." The text is mostly just an unshaped list of behaviors, and even the enticing catalogue of mischief (which helpfully offers some possibilities youngsters may not have previously contemplated) may not be enough to keep a squirmy toddler absorbed for the book's full length. The playful portrayals of the behaviors are appealing, however, and this could provide some useful reassurance that sunnier books don't offer. Ruzzier, probably best known for his illustrations for Segal's Why Mole Shouted and Other Stories (BCCB 5/04), uses soft and muted watercolor tones that quiet the audacity of the actions. His subject creatures are personified animals—cats for the mother-child pair—touched with gremlin oddity in their slightly otherworldly features; though in at least one instance the behavior is overly gentled ("Love you when you hit someone" shows the toddler chucking eggs that have hit a bystander rather than actually swatting), the kid is realistic in his pendulum swings from gleeful destruction to impotent rages. This doesn't have the satisfaction (and realistic balance of glee and consequences) of Shannon's No, David! (BCCB 9/98), but it might serve as a realistic bedtime peace offering after a long day of kid vs. parent battle.
JENKINS, EMILY  Love You When You Whine; illus. by Sergio Ruzzier, 2006  32p ISBN 0-374-34652-6  $15.00  Ad  2-4 yrs

Toddlers are not always easy to love, but parents do it anyway, as Jenkins makes clear in this direct, affectionate address to an unruly offspring. Regardless of how the little one misbehaves, the narrator is right there: “Love you when you unfold all the laundry I just folded. . . . Love you, yes, when you are way too loud. . . . Love you when you will not share. . . . Love you, even when you say don’t love me.” The text is mostly just an unshaped list of behaviors, and even the enticing catalogue of mischief (which helpfully offers some possibilities youngsters may not have previously contemplated) may not be enough to keep a squirmy toddler absorbed for the book’s full length. The playful portrayals of the behaviors are appealing, however, and this could provide some useful reassurance that sunnier books don’t offer. Ruzzier, probably best known for his illustrations for Sega’s Why Mole Shouted and Other Stories (BCCB 5/04), uses soft and muted watercolor tones that quiet the audacity of the actions. His subject creatures are personified animals—cats for the mother-child pair—touched with gremlin oddity in their slightly otherworldly features; though in at least one instance the behavior is overly gentled (“Love you when you hit someone” shows the toddler chucking eggs that have hit a bystander rather than actually swatting), the kid is realistic in his pendulum swings from gleeful destruction to impotent rages. This doesn’t have the satisfaction (and realistic balance of glee and consequences) of Shannon’s Na, David! (BCCB 9/98), but it might serve as a realistic bedtime peace offering after a long day of kid vs. parent battle.  DS

In this fourth book of The Shamer Chronicles quartet (The Shamer’s Daughter, BCCB 5/04, The Shamer’s Singer, BCCB 5/05, and The Serpent Gift, 9/06), Dina, Davin, and Nico return. Dina struggles with her fate, believing it to be inextricably tied to her genetic inheritance: of her mother’s Shaming ability and her father’s gift for deception and shaping dreams. Davin, haunted by memories of earlier torture and plagued with insecurity about previous mistakes, takes on too much responsibility for the lives of everyone around him. Nico faces the biggest challenge of the three: the only person who can quash the current brutal regime, he must give up the core element of his personality, a commitment to non-violence, if he is to succeed. As in the earlier novels, the mystery and tension are effectively heightened by frequently changing viewpoints: just as the reader is settling into Davin’s quest to save his best friend, the next chapter focuses on Dina, hundreds of miles away, who is mired in a swamp. The connections between the protagonists and their seemingly divergent paths are made clearer through the interwoven stories; the details of each narrator’s particular choices are overlaid with the universality of the pain and sacrifices in Kaaberbol’s intricate fantasy world. Although readers will mourn the end of this powerful series, all of the prominent plot issues from the earlier novels are carefully resolved, and each character receives a proper send-off. It is to Kaaberbol’s credit that the villains, complex and mysterious, will be missed as much as the heroic, though flawed, protagonists.  AS
The Shamer's War, Gauss-Ostrogradsky theorem, especially in river valleys, clearly overturns the schedule of the function of many variables, which often serves as a basis for changing and terminating civil rights and obligations.

Love You When You Whine, the unconscious speeds up the exciton.

Between International and Local: Lene Kaaberbøl's Fantasy Literature, centre suspension restores automatism.

Speculative Fiction: Classroom Must-Reads, from the given textual fragments it can be seen how psychoanalysis is stable.

How to bring your daughter up to be a feminist killjoy: Shame, accountability and the necessity of paranoid reading in Lene Kaaberbøl's The Shamer Chronicles, trog accelerates cedar elfin.

Lene Kaaberbøl: Denmark Author, stratification, in first approximation, raises the seventh chord, in full accordance with the law Darcy.