Abstract

This book is on the various methods of environmental impact assessment as a guide to the design of new environmental development and management projects. It surveys the features of the environment likely to be affected by consideration, analyses the information collected, and tries to predict the impact of these developments and lays down guidelines or rules for their management.

This book is concerned with practical problems, e.g. development of fisheries, pest control, etc. It is devoted to a general understanding of environmental systems through methods that have worked in the real world with its many uncertainties.
