Abstract:
This article provides an extremely influential account of how the Black church has played a significant role as a change amongst the Blacks in the USA from the days of slavery to date. Dating back from the 1800s, Blacks in the USA could be hanged by the slave masters - Whites, if they were caught reading or attempting to learn how to read (C-Span Book TV-2 USA, February, 2005). However, it is common knowledge that most African Americans found solace in the Black church which at times could be held in buildings or by the river banks, a practice that is still found in isolated parts of Zimbabwe today. Indigenous groups that are called the: "Mapositori" in the Shona vernacular language whose literal translation would be "The Apostles". During the slave era in the USA, a place of worship was not only utilized as a venue to fellowship in the name of the Lord God through Jesus Christ, but it was also used as a convenient comfort zone to discuss politics and thereby share needed for survival amidst the prevailing social injustices and hurdles that they found themselves in on a daily basis.
