Abstract: Folate deficiency is common in South African Bantu, for whom maize is a staple item of the diet. Maize flours are prepared both from degeminated germ-containing grain in progressively finer millings and lower extraction nates. Free and total folate activity (before and after treatment with conjugase) was determined for maize products by microbiological assay. Degermination of the maize seed more than halved the activity per unit weight of the whole seed. The most popular flour, the most refined, undegerminated 80% extraction and idegerminated 60%
