Erik S. Root's All Honor to Jefferson? is a forcefully argued book that examines the “public debate” over bondage in Virginia “between the Founding and the Civil War” (p. 2). Wishing “to elucidate the moral controversy over slavery,” Root argues that the state's founders were dedicated emancipationists who believed in the principles of natural rights and that slavery had to be eliminated (ibid.). By the late 1820s, however, a new generation of leaders, driven by “self-interest” (p. 108), rejected emancipation and turned to the “positive good” theory, most famously articulated by Thomas Roderick Dew, a professor at William and Mary College in the 1820s and 1830s.

The book's first several chapters examine the beliefs and actions of Virginia's founders. Root's goal here is to rescue men such as Thomas Jefferson and James Madison from charges of hypocrisy leveled by some...
