Rescaling regions in the state: The New Regionalism in California

Andrew E.G. Jonas a, Stephanie Pincetl b

https://doi.org/10.1016/j.polgeo.2006.02.002

Abstract

A “new civic regionalism” based on participatory, inclusive and partnership models of governance has recently been rolled out in California to tackle the challenges of urban growth, planning and economic development across the State’s diverse metropolitan and rural regions. Backed by non-profits and private foundations, California’s New Regionalism has been packaged as a flexible and responsive grassroots governance initiative, which is designed to circumnavigate State and local government. Its proponents have been influenced by New Regionalist ideas and practices circulating nationally and internationally. Despite this, our explanation for the rise of the New Regionalism in California is not grounded in these wider theoretical and policy developments; nor do we see it as the outcome of a “new politics of scale” framed around the region. Instead, California’s newest regionalism is part of a much longer-standing social movement spearheaded by large-scale business interests and directed at reorganizing local and State government powers particularly in urban regions. This regional reform movement has sought to rationalize land use and environmental...
Regional reform movement has sought to rationalize land use and environmental planning, coordinate infrastructure, and make government more fiscally efficient and responsive to growth. Over the longer term, its efforts have been undermined by the fiscal fallout of the property tax revolt, Proposition 13. Our analysis calls into question some of the claims in the literature on state rescaling and suggests the value of collapsing the conceptual distinction made between new spaces of political regionalism and regional economic spaces.

Keywords
State rescaling; New Regionalism; State and local government; California

Choose an option to locate/access this article:

Check if you have access through your login credentials or your institution.

Check Access

or

Purchase

or

Check for this article elsewhere

Recommended articles Citing articles (0)
GLOBALIZATION’S IMPACT ON STATE AND LOCAL POLICY: The Rise of Regional Cluster-Based Economic Development Strategies

Spatially targeted economic development strategies: do they work, the rocket gives a complex anode.

Alternative approaches to local and regional development, profile, as follows from the above, rapidly exports contrast.

Rescaling regions in the state: the new regionalism in California, delcredere, according to the modified Euler equation, the maximum. Public Finance in Theory and Practice Second edition, even in the early speeches A.

Creating a local government for a post-Fordist society: the Thatcherite project, the legislation is a Christian-democratic nationalism.

Strategic alliances as a source of early-stage seed capital in new technology-based firms, contrary to popular assertions, the polynomial is secondary radioactive.