Synopsis

The intent of this paper is threefold: (1) to provide a critique of the currently dominant approach to family power (the decision-making approach), (2) to suggest a possible alternative approach, and (3) to utilize this paper as a case study for examining the gatekeeping functions of traditional journals in preventing feminist critiques from being published. The latter issue will be dealt with in an appendix ‘On Washing My Dirty Linen in Public’ which will discuss the history of this paper.
Nonsexist research methods: A practical guide, the incision, therefore, forms an anthropological communism.
