The Social Justice Debates in Psychology and Theology: Thoughts on Turning the World Upside Down.

The Social Justice Debates in Psychology and Theology: Thoughts on "Turning the World Upside Down".

Author(s): Mostert, Johan

Abstract:
This article traces the developing prominence of the theme of social justice in both the professional world of psychology and the evangelical church community. This convergence creates the opportunity for the development of a movement to promote the cause of social justice in the Majority World. Five points of convergence are explored: (a) Social action and evangelicalism are not irreconcilable; (b) the social justice agenda is an appropriate focus for the future of psychology in the Majority World; (c) the culture-transcending nature of Christianity promotes social justice in a multi-ethnic context; (d) the social justice character of pentecostalism's growth in the Global South; and (5) the ubiquitous nature of the local church in the Global South. The modern Evangelical mental health professional is well-positioned to contribute to a movement that could "turn the world upside down."

Copyright of Journal of Psychology & Christianity is the property of Christian Association for Psychological Studies and its content may not be copied or emailed to multiple sites or posted to a listserv without the copyright holder's express written permission. However, users may print, download, or email articles for individual use. This abstract may be abridged. No warranty is given about the accuracy of the copy. Users should refer to the original published version of the material for the full abstract.

For access to this entire article and additional high quality information, please check with your college/university public library, or affiliated institution.

Important User Information: Remote access to EBSCO's databases is permitted to patrons of subscribing institutions from remote locations for personal, non-commercial use. However, remote access to EBSCO’s databases from institutions is not allowed if the purpose of the use is for commercial gain through cost reduction or avoidance subscribing institution.