Abstract:
The paper analyses the Voyage with «Don Quixote» by Thomas Mann (1934), an essay that, in the form of a half-fictional logbook, recounts Mann’s first ocean crossing from Europe to America. The analysis is methodological different levels, thanks also to the extensive use of the Tagebücher by Mann, an essential source in research about Thomas Mann. The Voyage with «Don Quixote» is first of all historically contextualized: in the first year of Mann's voluntary exi interrupted his writing of Joseph in Egypt, the third part of the biblical tetralogy, in order to evaluate the advisal openly intervening in the political problems of his time (the rise of National Socialism in Germany) through two an open letter to the «Times» or a proper book of political reflections, entitled Politikum. Instead, in the end Ma Voyage with «Don Quixote», with its ironic and encrypted writing. It is here that the second level of the critical r Domenico Conte is introduced, which unearths on the one hand the hidden psychological reasons (Thomas Ma the Voyage, and on the other hand its directly political motivations (the debate about National Socialism, also aj the direct and indirect consequences of the elimination of Röhm’s SA). Moreover, there is an even broader ba the crisis and the decline of European and also American culture in the age of civilization, characterized by the impetuous rhythm of technological development and the stagnation of spiritual evolution. Therefore, the cross is made on a modern ocean liner, but with his eyes fixed on the lifeboat.
