Description/Abstract
This article proposes a new model for understanding the ways that scriptures function. Several big media stories of recent years, such as those surrounding Commandments monuments in U.S. courthouses and Qur’ans desecrated at Guantánamo Bay, involve the iconic function of scriptures. Yet contemporary Christian or Muslim scriptures are ill-prepared to interpret these focused almost all its efforts on textual interpretation. Even the performative function of scripture by Wilfred Cantwell Smith provide resources for understanding the iconic roles of scriptu the gap by theorizing the nature of scriptures as a function of th dimensions—semantic, performative, and iconic. The model pi conceptualizing how traditions ritualize scriptures and how the power through this process.
